Today, Chicago's soul/jazz/R&B outfit, The O'My's released their new album Tomorrow via Haight Brand. The album marks the first release from the duo since their 2015, Keeping the Faith EP. The news follows yesterday's BILLBOARD premiere and coincides with the release of the duo's new video for "Idea" feat. Chance The Rapper, premiered today via Pitchfork. The track is a powerful and sentimental song with sparse and selective instrumentation that provides space for Haymes' smooth vocals and Chance The Rapper's insightful verse. The song is accompanied by an evocative black and white video featuring the streets of Chicago in a downpour creating a somber reflection of the city's buildings and provides the perfect canvas for the emotive song.

The O'My's, composed of Maceo Haymes and Nick Hennessey, started simply with the album; sitting in a room together while playing their instruments and turning the results into well-crafted songs. Maceo and Nick set out to capture their experiences over the past few years giving Tomorrow the emotional resonance that grabs listeners from start to finish. Much like the Quiet Storm era musicians, The O'My's create understated, soulful music with relaxed rhythms. Working with various artists in Chicago's music scene speaks to their versatility, while balancing a genre-less project. To best highlight their experiences the group enlisted the talents of longtime Chicago collaborators Nico Segal (Donnie Trumpet, SaveMoney), Will Miller (Whitney), Saba and Chance the Rapper among many.

Catch them live as they make their way across the U.S., playing select shows including a hometown release performance on Sept 28th at Chicago's Park West Fest, followed by an intimate New York show on Oct 17th at Rough Trade and wrapping in New Orleans at the Voodoo Festival on Oct 28th. Full dates are below and stay tuned for more news to follow.
